Select the new edit message> attachments> insert attachments at the end. Then, in the body of the message, choose Attach. Examine and select the file you want to attach, then select Select the file. To attach the files in another place of your message, you will edit> attachments and uncheck insert attachments at the end. By default, mail for mac OS X and macOS place attachments where you insert them in your email message (that is, inline). So it is like inserting attachment to the end of a message and making this the predetermined behavior for all messages. These instructions apply to Macos Catalina (10.15) but work in all versions of macOS or OS X that include the mail application, although the diagonal box, the Menu and the command names may differ. To attach a file or image at the bottom of an email instead of inline, complete the following steps: in mail, in the mail toolbar, select new message. Select edit & %> y attachments> insert attachments at the end. In the email body, select Attach. Navigate to the file you want to attach, select and select Select the file. His attached will appear at the end of his email message. To attach files elsewhere in your message, get to attachments again in the MENU and select insert attachments in ED again to uncheck it. With this option, you can have images and files anywhere in the body of an email. Keep the verified option forever put the attachments at the end. Thank you for letting us know! Dinos why! Using Apple Mail's application in a MAC? You may be losing gigabytes of attachment space that you could be putting better use. This is what you can do about it. First, check how space email is using by default, the application He wants to cache each email and attached he has received in line. This could take dozens of space gigabytes if you have a lot of electronic emails. In a Mac with a big hard drive, this is not much. But in a MacBook with a 128 GB SSD, this can be a significant significant waste To see how space can be wasting in the email attachments, you will need to verify the source. Each user account on your MAC has an email directory in your library folder. That is ~ is ~/library/mail, or/users/name/library/mail. It is where the mail application stores your data for each user. To see it, open the search engine, click "VO" in the men's bar and choose "Go to the folder." Type ~/library in the painting and press return. Locate the mail folder, click on the right bottle or put it with control, and select "get information." Tampa 1. Mac when you initially received them if they were important. So, unless you are maintaining a historical email file for personal or legal reasons, it is generally safe to delete them. There are not many options to delete your email attachments from the copy of the copy from the copy Local while leave them on the server, but fortunately there is a software that does. Cleanmymac X has a tool that will look through its email and found It will have great attachments. Assuming that IMAP is using (which is the default value), leave the attached files on the server and only eliminate the local copy. WARNING: Before eliminating anything in your Mac, be sure to have backup copies in case you accidentally eliminate something by mistake. Cleanmymac X has a lot of other tools to help him clean his MAC, so he is trying to discover how to free some disk space, he can definitely help him. POP3 really is not ideal for a modern email system, but this would give you email notifications with Mail and allow you to send messages from it while leaving your file only on your email server. Related: Email Bases: POP3 is obsolete; Please change to IMAP today Option 3: Ditch Mail and use something else There's no way to completely deactivate Mail's space loss behavior, so you can just want to stop using the Mail app all together. Then you can delete those gigabytes of data locally cache, and Mail will not try to download more emails. Instead of the Mail app, you can use the web-based interface of your email service, for example, Gmail on the web for Gmail users. You could also search for a third-party e-mail client on the Mac App Store or elsewhere. Other email clients should offer an option to store fewer emails offline and limit the size of their cache to a manageable size. To stop using the Mail app, disable first or remove your email accounts. Click the "Mail" menu in the Mail application and select "Contaciones". Uncheck the email option for accounts you no longer want to use Mail with. Mail will stop downloading emails from those accounts. But this is not enough! Deactivate the email account, and emails will no longer appear in the Mail app, but they are still stored in your offline cache. You can remove the folder to release the space. Warning: Before deleting your emails on your Mac, make sure you have backups in case you accidentally delete important emails by mistake. If the mailsThey are not yet on the server, it won't be able to recover them! To do this, Open Finder, click on the men's & € ogoô € and select & € ogo to folderâ €.
